Florida Department of Children and Families, Substance Abuse/Child Welfare Collaboration Preferred Practice Model Components and Comparisons for Demonstration Project Proposal

Note: There may be some modest exceptions to current casework practice in terms of certain elements of the integrated casework practice model (for example, very limited use of family conferencing and FIS positions.) There are not any sites implementing all of the integrated casework practice components. Under the waiver evaluation, a control site may also offer a few of the components of the integrated model.

Engagement and Strength-based Practice	The focus of investigators is gathering evidence for purposes of proving that child maltreatment occurred and/or that child removal is needed. Investigators must also determine which services are needed, including court supervision of the family. The focus of service interveners is generally on the individual problems of children or caregivers. Goals of case plans and treatment plans are stated in terms of provider goals, not family goals. The family's support system is not involved in case planning.	The focus of investigators will be an assessment of family needs related to health, safety, and sobriety that compromise child safety for purposes of creating the right family team to assist with case planning. The investigator, with the assistance of a FIS or crises response team, will begin the process of identifying family strengths, needs, abilities and preferences. Service interveners will continue to leverage child and family strengths, abilities, and preferences in order to help children and families succeed in achieving their goals. (Refer also to service planning process and informal supports)	Cross-system training on engagement, motivation, stages of change including relapse, and strength-based practice will be needed. Community development work will be needed to identify sources of family support for those families needing new resources (e.g. persons in recovery who will serve on family team).

Casework Attributes	Current Casework Practice (Control Sites)	Integrated Casework Practice (IV-E Waiver Sites)	Required Capacity Building to Achieve Integrated Casework Practice
Functional Assessments	Individual investigators and caseworkers determine which assessments are needed. Assessments obtained focus on individual problems of children as well as individual problems of their parents. Multiple professional assessments may differ in their view of the child and/or caregivers. A family systems view of the child and family is not generally obtained. Input from other family members/friends is not obtained and incorporated into the assessment.	A protective investigator and a FIS, or a crises response team conducts assessments initially. Subsequent assessment needs are the result of decisions made by the family team.	Cross-system training on the broader concept of functional assessments, screening for neurological disorders in children, and achieving agreement on assessment information through the family team meeting process, will be needed.

Child and Family Service	The child welfare caseworker determines what the case plan goals will be, and what services will be required in a family's case plan. The substance abuse provider determines what the treatment plan will be. These services are often incorporated into a court order. Generally, the child and his/her family does not view the goals as "their goals" or the services as ones they have selected. Children and their parents are not offered choices or options based on their preferences.	With support from a case manager, the family determines what their long-range goals are, and based on those goals, who needs to participate on their family team. The caseworker helps the family identify both formal and informal persons to serve on the team. When a family is not able to identify a family member or friend, the caseworker helps them identify person(s) who have the potential to become sources of support.	Cross training in family conferencing will be needed. Cross training needs to include judges, general masters, and attorneys.

	involved in case planning.	When other caregivers for the children are needed (relatives or foster care), these caregivers will be involved on the family's team.
Effective Teamwork and Coordination	The involved professionals, without child and family input, make major decisions in a case. At times, the child welfare case manager and substance abuse professional may disagree on major decisions impacting the child and family. There may be other professionals involved who are not in agreement as to next steps needed. Service interventions may be occurring simultaneously, and may be duplicative or contradictory. For example, the substance abuse treatment program may be providing parent skills training, at the same time a parent is attending a different parenting program. Information may be shared with the case manager, but not among multiple professionals involved. Relapse planning is often included in the substance abuse treatment plan, but is not part of the child welfare	All major decisions occur at family team meetings, and reflect consensus among team members. The team works to promote trust, respect and honesty among all team members. The case manager works with the family and team members to determine when team meetings are needed, and who should attend. The team is skillful in addressing the safety needs of victims of domestic violence and in planning team meetings accordingly. Often, team meetings will occur separately with the victim. All team members understand the family's goals, strategies to achieve goals, and their current status throughout the course of the case. Efforts are made to hold team meetings at times and places conducive to meeting attendance by the family and other key partners. When key persons are not able to attend, the case manager ensures that knowledge and information from the missing team member(s) is shared before and after the meeting. The child and family are able to provide	Cross training, development of family conference facilitators, and partnership agreements noted in preceding section. Training for alternative caregivers (relatives and foster parents) will need to be provided on engagement, motivation, stages of change, and strength-based practice. For relative caregivers, this training might occur through their participation on family teams. Expectations and training for foster parents need to be broadened to include participation on team meetings, and supporting parents in the achievement of their goals. Assisting with parent visitation and parent mentoring need to be an optional support that foster parents will provide.

The team is open and responsive in making changes to the case plan. This includes requesting changes to court ordered services when needed. Relapse planning should always be a component of the child welfare and substance abuse treatment plans. The plans are consistent, and complimentary, in relapse planning as well as other issues.	Agreements with other system providers also need to address partnership willingness to respond to child and family feedback, including the possibility that current service interventions need to change.
		The family's support system is involved and actively participating in the child and family's recovery by participating on the family team. Alternative caregivers, whether they are relatives or foster parents, are involved on the team and are working to support the child and family's recovery.
Out-of-home Placement of Children	Residential substance abuse treatment for a parent often requires the out-of-home placement of the children. The decision to place children is often made by the investigator, or later in	Through the crises response team or family team, depending upon the point at which child placement becomes an issue, families will be involved in the decisions about placement of their children. A few residential women's treatment programs exist where the children can reside with the woman at the treatment facility; however, there are only few of these programs across Florida. Visitation plans are required for visits with parents and siblings.	 Substitute caregivers who can come to the family's home Foster caregivers who care for the children in the foster parent's home. When family or friends are not possible options, the parent will be given at least two sets of foster parents to choose from. 	As noted above, expectations and training for foster parents need to be broadened to include participation on team meetings, and supporting parents in the achievement of their goals. Assisting with parent visitation and parent mentoring need to be an optional support that foster parents will provide.
Substance Abuse Treatment Services	Treatment focuses on parent and parental substance abuse. Parent is required by the child welfare system to complete treatment and remain substance free. Assistance to the family in accessing services is generally not provided. Most SA providers are attending to mental health issues as a high percentage of their clients have co-occurring disorders.	Treatment provider (or the FIS) will participate on a family team. The substance abuse professional will engage with the team in assessing the family system as part of the functional assessment, and the impact that recovery will have on other family members. The treatment provider will help the team understand the stages of change with recovery, including the person's current stage and likelihood of relapse. The provider will also help the team understand the intensity and duration of treatment needed, and the particular challenges related to the	Substance abuse providers, including the FIS, will need training related to their new roles in the context of family teams. ² As used in Florida's waiver request, the term "in- home" is intended to include alternatives to residential treatment, such as reliance on AA, faith-based recovery, Solution Focused Brief Therapy. It also includes step-down services for participants who have completed residential treatment and are in need of additional therapeutic and natural supports to transition back in to the community.

When residential treatment is needed but not available, the team will create an alternative strategy that allows for "in-home care" based on other community services such as AA/NA/Al-anon, appropriate faith-based models, and innovative outpatient services. ² Treatment providers will help the family team identify the risk factors that may trigger the substance abuse as well as the child maltreatment. They will help the team plan with relapse planning. They will assist the team in understanding treatment progress and how ongoing recovery can be supported. Substance abuse treatment capacity needs to be expanded to include child abuse, trauma and mental health issues. Substance abuse and child welfare relationships with local AA/NA/Al-anon and faith-based recovery programs will need to be strengthened. Successful transitions and Aftercare	When treatment is completed and children are reunified, there is generally a period of six months of supervision by the child welfare caseworker. Usually, ongoing random drug screening is the only means to measuring sustained progress. New family dynamics related to the recovery of the parent are not addressed. Rarely is there coordination with the substance abuse provider as to participation in aftercare programs,	The family team assesses the child and family needs for assistance and support after treatment has been completed. Aftercare planning will continue to address the child and family's health, safety and sobriety. Aftercare planning may include a combination of formal and informal supports for the caregiver who is recovering, based on their cultural preferences. Aftercare planning addresses the significant changes for other family members, and identifies appropriate support strategies. The team should determine when the formal involvement of the child welfare and substance abuse treatment systems will no longer be needed.
